"You horrid beast!"

With her slender, almost angelic face gone white with rage, Mary Knox hurled herself upon him, pounding at his chest with two small ineffectual fists.

James Jarrett's grin was the Devil's own. He dropped the stick. Pinioned her in his mighty arms. Bent down and kissed her mouth, slowly, lingeringly, with all his rakehell's skill.

The pounding stopped. She stiffened, froze. He went on kissing her. Felt, very slowly, the thaw set in. The stiffness melting into spring warmth, young, sweet-sighing.

He turned her loose. Made a deep and mocking bow.

"Permit me to present myself," he said. "James Jarrett, Marquis of Argyll, Laird of Clan Jarrett and—your future husband!"
