SPIRITUAL SAYINGS OF KAHLIL GIBRAN . . .

"We are still busy examining sea shells as if they were all that emerge from the sea of life to the shore of day and night."

"The heartbreak of love sings, the sadness of knowledge speaks, the melancholy of desire whispers, and the anguish of poverty weeps. But there is a sorrow deeper than love, loftier than knowledge, stronger than desire, and more bitter than poverty. It is mute and has no voice; its eyes glitter like stars."

"An epoch will come when people will disclaim kinship with us as we disclaim kinship with the monkeys."

In simple language, the Love Prophet probes the complexities of life and death and manifests his profound love of God, nature and man, and his tender compassion for the world's oppressed.

Spiritual Sayings of Kahlil Gibran is remarkable not only for its poetry, but because its ancient wisdom is so startlingly relevant to the problems of today.
